Spearfishing and underwater hunting can be challenging at all levels. Getting started is easy and can be enjoyed on any of the Long Island coasts. Succulent sushi, fresh fish fillets, and steaming lobster are within your reach. With a focus on Long Island's aquatic eco-systems and tidal zones, Matt Sasso brings his 30 years of underwater hunting experiences, successes and mishaps to life in a real no-nonsense soup-to-nuts approach geared to bring you positive results on your next adventure. Topics will include hunter safety, fish identification, fishing regulations, equipment selection and use, hunting techniques, conservation practices, catch preparation, sushi secrets, finding good hunting spots, and much more.

This seminar is highly recommended for novice and intermediate underwater hunters alike, as well as underwater photographers and wildlife enthusiasts who are looking for more intimate interactions with the creatures of our underwater world. Snorkelers and freediving fisherman will also benefit from the presentation. Underwater hunting can be a great introduction to scuba for many who have never dived before, so bring your friends and family for an informative and entertaining evening of spearfishing Long Island's shores.
